Strange Frenk of a Marriage-cursed The Paris correspondent of the New Orleans Delta relates this singular story :

Our goseips are just now considerably ex-ercised by the discovery of an electric in young Parision nobleman, whose addities have become the term talk. But the Count de R, alas! for his tendencies to puppyism, married, and found marrimony far more agreeable in theory than in practice—at least in his own case. It was not long before the Counters and himself advanced from the endearment stage to the moody; thence to increasing spream—the transition was easy ngenious sarcasm-the transition was easyafter which came or exciton was easy—after which came or excitonal "scenes," succeeded by open quarrels, and winding up at last with a grand row, in which countrial thunder and lightning played a conspicuous part. The curtain fell on this drama of married life with a judicial separation, which is about equivalent to a divorce, except that neither party can marry again during the lifetime of the other. However, it may be readily supposed that the Count was quite readily supposed that the Count was quite indifferent to that matter; one wife was quite enough for him, and he proved his sentiments, immediately after being finally rid of Madame la Comtesse, by banishing from his premises everything in the shape of crinoline, and turning cynic. This lasted for a time, but the Count was not long in imagoline, and turning cynic. This lasted for a time; but the Count was not long in imagining that he must have something to love—something to caress, to humor, to sit next him at table. This being the case, our misanthrope made a purchase. "I thought so!" exclaims a fair reader. "What else could be expected?" Stop! stop! not too fast, if you please. As I was about to say, when you thus interrupted me, the Count made a purchase, in the shape of a handsome and intelligent—Newfoundland dog. The name of the new fiavorite, bestowed after long and anxious reflection, was "Sultan"—though I really do not know why a great amount of thought was necessary in the selection of that imperial appellation. Sultan was the name chosen, however, and Sultan was the name chosen, however, and Sultan was the name chosen to the elegant mansien of his proprietor and companion. Leading the sagacious brute into a sumptous drawingsagacious brute into a sumptous drawing-room, the Count made a short speech, giving an impartial statement of his matrimonial troubles. Sultan expressed his sympathy by an occasional short how!. "Sultan," said the Count, in conclusion, "these marks of tenderness on your part are grateful to my lacerated feelings. I respect and love you for them; and henceforth you shall be my And the Count has religiously kept his word. His acquaintances at the Club were formally presented to Sultan, under the name of the Viscount de Terre Neuve. A special valet was at once placed at his service, with orders to obey his every caprice. His sleep-ing chamber is on the first floor front, with ing chamber is on the first floor front, with a balcony from which Sultan can amuse himself, after breakfast, by looking as lazily as he likes up and down the street. If he desires anything he need only ring, and a liveried servant appears instantly. If he wishes to be alone, he has only to slightly raise his upper lip, or growl gently, and the liveried servant bows himself out at once. Account the County friends Sultan has see Among the Count's friends Sultan has se-lected a half dozen intimates, whose visits lected a half dozen intimates, whose visits he returns with scrupulous courtesy, and whose savory gifts he accepts with condescending urbanity. When he is invited out to dine, a written request is sent, with as much ceremony as if he were the Moorish Embassador, or Vefyke Effendi, and when he enters a strange drawing-room, the lackey at the fost of the stairs bawls out, "Monsieur le Vicomte de Terre Neuve!" in his most sonorous tones. If this formality is not performed with the customary salaam to the newly-arrived guest, Sultan signifies his dissatisfaction by leaving the imprint of his teeth upon the lackey's calves. When in a playful mood, he does so anyhow, to test the playful mood, he does so anyhow, to test the thickness of the major domo's silk stockings, or to ascertain if his legs are not padded.

It sometimes happens that Sultan excites the Count's jealousy by his exceeding the Count's jealousy by his exceeding amenity to the strangers whom he meets in public. On these occasions, the misanthropic gentlemen says to his companion, on their way home, "Sultan, I am not pleased with your conduct this evening. I caught you several times in the act of winking—positively and unequivocally winking—to different ladies. I have told you my sad experience, and you ought to be warned by it. The women are not to be trusted, my dear Sultan, believe me!" To which Sultan replies by a deprecatory growl or two, which plies by a deprecatory growl or two, which signifies as clearly as growls can, that he will keep a sharp look-out for the belie sex, and not suffer himself to be bambooxled. Hereupon the Count is restored to good humor immediately, and apologizes for having entertained. immediately, and apologizes for having entertained a momentary suspicion that Sultan might fall a victim to the wiles of womankind; "but," says M. de R., with a melancholy shake of the head, "they're such artful minxes, you know!"
Sultan ought to be a happy dog. The Count has made a will, constituting the favorite his principal heir, should the Newfoundland survive his friend and protector.
The only condition attached to the legacy is that Sultan is to remain a bachelor. It was wise, perhaps, to thus provide againt a pos-

wise, perhaps, to thus provide againt a pos-sible contingency, when the lapse of time shall have weakened the strength of lesson and example; and, as every body knows, Paris is a city of terrible temptations. So, were it not for the numerous collateral Newfoundlands scattered over the two hem-ispheres, that noble race might run some risk of becoming extinct with the demise of the Vicemte de Terre Neuve.

The Ralmon and Religious Revenues of Brigium is probably the most completely Roman Catholic coverignty in Europe. The population is 4,337,000, of which 4,327,000 are Bornan Catholics, leaving only 7,368 Protestants. The State pays the Roman Catholic clergy 4,336,000 francs, or about a france a head for each member of the church. The Church has, besides, private revenues, amounting to 800,000 francs, which, divided among 5,000 clergy, of all ranks, gives less than 1,000 franca as the average stipend. To the 7,368 Protestants, Belgium pays yearly 50,000 francs, being at the rate of eight frances for each Protestant in the kingdom. It also allows 7,300 francs to the Israelites, or about seven france a head. THE RELIGION AND RELIGIOUS REVENUES OF

THE CHARGES OF A CENTURY.—The New cleans Programs says that in the year 1768, he entire exports of that whole region secunted to $250,000, and consisted of daigo, furz, lumber, sea stores, rice, peas,

A Rise-paren Kiss.—A Texan merchant recently threw his arm around a respecta-ble lady, at Philadelphia, and kissed ber. He was arrested and held to $500 bail, which he forfaited by suddanly leaving the city, probably having arranged with his surety.

Weakness of the organs cured and full vigor restored.

-0F-RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA,

HE DORS NOT CLAIM THAT THIS Medicine will cure every disease that the himan system is heir to; but, for those above named, if the directions are strictly followed, he does most positively promise it will.

The respectability and standing of the parties who have tried it, (in some cases the parties have been afflicted for twenty years,) and whose certificates can be seen at the drug-stores where the medicine is for sale, it is presumed will be a sufficient guarantee that this medicine is all it is represented to be, and no humber.

The demand for this medicine at the South, where it was first introduced, in February list, and whare the good effects and permanent cures are known, is ogreat that it is almost impossible to fill ble orders. The medicine can be obtained at the following drug-stores:
